Nanjing is a big city, but one with a small town feel, with a number of distinct zones in which most activity, aside from residential and industrial, can be found. These areas, with colour coded shading, are the focus of the fold out map at the rear of this guide, and each offer their own unique glimpse into life in one of the world’s most ancient metropolises.

Hanzhong Men

Hanzhong Men is an ideal place from which to start a relaxing walk along the Qinhuai river that divides Nanjing, by and large, into east and west. Such a walk takes one past Stone City, the site of Nanjing’s beginnings 2,500 years ago. Visitors come to witness the giant face carved into all that remains, a massive stone edifice that was latterly and ingeniously incorporated into the city wall. To the south west of the gate itself, Mochou Lake is the venue for the city’s annual Dragon Boat race, one of the top such events in the country, as thousands gather on the lake banks in the hope of seeing local companies, many of whom have trained hard all year, either sink or swim! From water to wheels, a little further south is the smaller Nanhu (South lake) where some of the city’s enthusiastic skateboarders congregate.

1912 was the year in which Dr. Sun Yatsen founded the democratic Republic of China, here in Nanjing. Hardly a fitting name for the city’s premier destination for hedonism. Yet, there is more to the area than mere nightclubs; curious offerings are to be found in the alleyways to the west of the main entertainment complex that also reveal a glimpse into the Nanjing of old. Diagonally across the street to the south west, one finds the Jiangning Imperial Silk Weaving Museum with a host of exhibits not only limited to the garment industry. Immediately to the east, the Presidential Palace is one of China’s top tourist attractions, although the outsider may find it a little difficult to understand why, while a little further is the slightly more modern Six Dynasties Museum. Up north are some of the finest up-close-and-personal views of the city atop Jiuhua Shan and the gem that is the city wall overlooking Xuanwu Lake at Jiming Temple.
Yuhuatai

The “Rain Flower Stage”, lies on the southern edge of Nanjing’s generally accepted downtown. Here, find the imposing Yuhuatai Memorial Park of Revolutionary Martyrs, a former mass execution ground from the Chinese Civil War that began in 1927. If politics and propaganda are your thing there is a lot to see in this gargantuan national base for patriotic education. On a more positive note, that very year also marked the start of the so-called Nanjing Decade that has become fashionable with nationalist nostalgia for the Republican era, sometimes labelled the “aristocratic spirit”. In Yuhuatai, this is best manifest in the 1865 Creativity Park, where former factories are now a maze of art galleries, workshops and startups.

Shanghai Lu

Shanghai Lu and its environs are a major draw for Nanjing’s international community, particularly the younger crowd who may be students at one of the nearby universities, or simply in need of weekend beverages. A simple walk around the campus of either Nanjing University or Nanjing Normal University is a metaphorical breath of fresh air that leaves one feeling at peace, while the area also offers international restaurants, delis, shopping and business opportunities aplenty. Shanghai Lu also skirts past Wutaishan, a multi-purpose sports centre that dates back to the 1950s and around which today are a good mix of interesting local shops, restaurants and bars. The northern end of Ninghai Lu is more than worth a look around, along with Yihe Lu and Guling Lu that lie off it, for their being the homes of the powerful elite in former times. The popularity and sheer beauty of the classic Republican era architecture has made them now into the homes of the merely rich.

Olympia

Nanjing’s Olympic area is thus named as the venue for the 2005 National Games that saw a purpose built sports centre constructed. Nowadays, it plays host to concerts, restaurants, sports shops and, naturally, an Olympic size pool. The Youth Olympics of 2014 left a considerable footprint on the area; not least the Nanjing Internation Youth Culture
Jiangning Central

The downtown of Jiangning is the most commercially developed area of the sprawling district where unspoilt flora and fauna seem to go on forever. Many an expat family chooses to live here, the area offering plenty space for their employer’s factory.

Purple Mountain

By the time you pick up this guide, Purple Mountain will likely need little introduction. Our insider advice to to stay well clear at weekends and holidays. The national park, however, is also home to scores of other attractions; near the top of our list would be the “cradle of Chinese astronomy” that is the Purple Mountain Observatory (take the cable car but again, avoid the crowds), and around the mountain’s base, Nanjing’s botanical gardens and aquarium. The gem of Purple Mountain however, remains Purple Cloud Lake, a popular destination for picnicking and swimming during the warmer months. Be warned though; a number of deaths occur each year as a result of cramp from currents of stone cold water feeding the lake from inside the mountain. Either do not go swimming alone, or take a floatation device.

Hexi

While meaning “west of the river”, the Qinhuai that is, Hexi usually more accurately refers to a second Central Business District that is rapidly developing. Here, no visit to our city would be complete without bearing witness to the atrocities on display at the Nanjing Massacre Memorial. Proceeding westwards, the area starts to resemble many of the quieter suburbs in Shanghai while there is plenty of offer in terms of quality food and shopping in and around both New City Mall that has received a boost with the opening of Metro Line 4, Wanda Hexi and further south in The Central.

Jiangning Central

The downtown of Jiangning is the most commercially developed area of the sprawling district where unspoilt flora and fauna seem to go on forever. Many an expat family chooses to live here, the area offering plenty space for their employer’s factory, while almost 400 children attend the British School of Nanjing with a premier location, sitting snugly into the side of Cuiping Mountain. Heading eastwards, King Mo and Golden Eagle are the places to head for quality imports and a good selection of restaurants and shops, while the Wanda Jiangning Mall has more of the same in what was once the village of Dongshan, before progress invaded; “Dongshan Public Transport” on the sides of buses is almost all that remains.

Xianlin is also one of Nanjing’s three university towns, and here, as in the others, many of the city’s premier universities have set up fancy new campuses that put other countries to shame. Look for several excellent western eateries, delis, bakeries etc., while it is impossible not to notice a large foreign population concentrated around Nanjing International School, with its enrolment going on 700. Xianlin is also the jumping off point for a trip to Qixia Mountain and the accompanying buddhist temple. As the city’s biggest temple that is also almost 1,500 years old, a pilgrimage to it in October when the Maple trees are ablaze is a must for any visit to Nanjing. Best done on a weekday and by starting very early in the morning.

For a city of eight million, Nanjing’s centre that is Xinjiekou is in fact rather small, centred above the metro station with its 24 exits that efficiently place one almost anywhere in the CBD. At its northern end, shopping for only the uber rich in Deji Plaza plus a great selection of international dining options in IST Mall. Smack bang in the middle, the Jinling Hotel might be China’s oldest 5 star hotel but even in 2017 it is still home to many of Nanjing’s top facilities. Contrast this with its southern periphery where there is still a chance for a final glimpse at a Nanjing of a hundred plus years ago. Lying adjacent to the Cinna Lane complex above Sanshan Jie metro station that also houses Ganxi’s Villa with its 99 and a half rooms (go figure), these few blocks are home to much of the city’s most interesting history. Dating from the early Ming dynasty when General Zhu Yuanjiang made Nanjing the Chinese capital, here were to be found tea houses, inns, restaurants, workshops, mosques plus taoist and buddhist temples. Pingshi Jie (“to settle matters”) was even home to a court with trial by public. Qijia Huan was traditionally where lived the Hui, China’s original Muslims. Some of their descendants can still be seen today, serving up the traditional beef noodles and dumplings amid the alleyways.
